We can only accept a counter-notification directly from the user who originally submitted the allegedly infringing material. For verification, we require that counter-notifications be submitted from the email address associated with the original submission.

After we receive a counter notification, we will forward it to the party who submitted the original claim of copyright infringement. Please note that when we forward the counter notification, it will include your personal information. By submitting a counter notification, you consent to having your information communicated and revealed in this way. We will not forward the counter notification to any party other than the original claimant.

Please understand that filing a counter-notification may lead to legal proceedings between you and the claimant to determine ownership or rights. Also be aware that there may be adverse legal consequences in your country if you make a false or bad faith allegation by using

After we send the counter-notification to the original claimant, the claimant will have 10 business days (under currently applicable U.S. law) to reply whether or not the complainant has filed an action seeking a court order to restrain engagement in infringing activity relating to the material on the Website. If we receive such a reply, we will be unable to restore the material to the Website pending such court adjudication. If we do not receive such a reply, we may reinstate the material.
